In a time when disinformation spreads rapidly and journalists face increasing threats and backlash, uplifting fearless reporting has never been more critical.

That's why the American Humanist Association is honored to award Amy Goodman with the prestigious title of the 2024 Humanist of the Year, to be presented at the American Humanist Association's annual conference this September. Details at conference.americanhumanist.org.

Through Democracy Now!, which airs on over 1,400 public television and radio stations worldwide, she brings vital stories to the forefront—stories often overlooked by mainstream media. Her dedication to journalistic integrity has garnered her numerous honors, including the first journalist to receive the Right Livelihood Award, commonly known as the 'Alternative Nobel Prize'. Goodman has also co-authored six New York Times bestsellers, including Democracy Now!: Twenty Years Covering the Movements Changing America, which chronicles the powerful movements shaping our world.

Amy Goodman is a tireless advocate for truth and justice, using her platform to shed light on stories that matter. Her work consistently amplifies the voices of ordinary people who challenge corporate and government power. Her commitment to grassroots political journalism is not just inspiring—it's essential for the preservation of democracy and human rights.
